The forthcoming Jerwood Encounters exhibition, Family Politics, curated by Photoworks will show at Jerwood Space, London from 6 November – 8 December 2013.

The exhibition will present new commissions and existing work by six early career photographers relating to 'Family Politics' - the curatorial theme of the first issue of Photoworks Annual which will launch alongside the exhibition. The exhibiting artists include invited artists Claudia Sola and The Photocopy Club; and artists selected from an open call, Jonny Briggs, Robert Crosse, Nikolai Ishchuk and Joanna Piotrowska. The exhibition explores the different ways in which artists consider and use photographic practice resulting in an expanded view of the medium.

As a subject, the family is both private and public: the site of intimate inter-personal relations and a social construct subject to public and political pressures. This relationship is mirrored in examples of family photography. The majority of family pictures serve essentially private functions, accruing meaning through their relationship to the memories, experiences and histories of individuals. However, the family is also the subject of public photographic representation and contestation largely through digital media and 'over sharing'. This involves a wide variety of practices, including representations in the mass media, art and advertising.

Family Politics features a variety of approaches to photography with each work drawing on photographic language as a reference point.

The exhibition coincides with the publication of Photoworks Annual which explores the Family Politics theme further with commissioned work from Jowhara Alsaoud and Claudia Sola, Folios by Broomberg & Chanarin and John Clang; conversations between: Marianne Hirsch and Lorrie Novak, Wendy Ewald and Anthony Luvera, Bettina von Zwehl and Kelley Wylder and writings from Michael Bonesteel, Susan Bright, Terry Dennett, Geoffrey Batchen, Blake Stimson, Sarah James, Stephanie Schwartz, and Judith Habelstram, Aaron Schuman, Blake Morrison, Andrew Kötting, Sue Hubbard and David Company amongst others.
